

Monday, October 31, 2005

Market Decisions and Decisions for Christ

"Preferences for goods and services, like preferences for one's friends, are revealing. In markets we don't reveal what our true preferences are until we buy products and services. Surveys that allow us to 'choose' among alternatives, without incurring any cost, are not the same as market decisions. No wonder that the results of surveys and questionnaires differ from behavior, when choices are costly." This is copied from an article found at this site- http://www.johnlocke.org/articles/display_story.html?id=2852 It uses the TV show American Idol to illustrate a truth about economic choices. This statement is also true about spiritual and moral choices, as well. Many people say they have chosen Christ as Lord and Savior. Unless and until they demonstrate costly commitment to obeying Him, what they say is meaningless.

Posted by Cal at 11:28

See:
http://www.the-highway.com/Decisional_Regeneration.html
Anonymous on Oct 31 2005, 16:47